From the crystal-clear waters of the Caribbean to the deep blue depths of the Pacific, the world's oceans are home to some of the most beautiful and awe-inspiring places on Earth. In his new book, "All The Beauty Of The Sun," award-winning photographer and author Gary Arndt takes readers on a breathtaking journey through these fabled seas, capturing their beauty in stunning photographs and sharing fascinating stories about the people and cultures who call them home.

Arndt's journey begins in the Caribbean, where he explores the turquoise waters and white-sand beaches of the Bahamas, Jamaica, and Belize. He then travels to the Mediterranean Sea, where he visits the ancient ruins of Greece and Rome, and the vibrant cities of Barcelona and Istanbul. From there, he heads to the Indian Ocean, where he explores the colorful coral reefs of the Maldives and the tropical islands of Sri Lanka. Finally, he concludes his journey in the Pacific Ocean, where he visits the remote islands of French Polynesia and the majestic fjords of New Zealand.

Throughout his journey, Arndt encounters a diverse cast of characters, from fishermen and sailors to marine biologists and conservationists. He learns about the challenges facing the world's oceans, from overfishing and pollution to climate change. But he also finds hope in the people who are working to protect these precious ecosystems.

"All The Beauty Of The Sun" is a stunning celebration of the world's oceans, and a reminder of the importance of protecting them. Arndt's photographs are breathtaking, and his stories are both informative and inspiring. This is a book that will appeal to anyone who loves the ocean, travel, or photography.
